

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
EASTERN DISTRICT OF WASHINGTON

MICHAEL PATRICK NEWELL and CINDY
LOU NEWELL, individually and as a marital community,

Plaintiffs,

v.

HOME DEPOT U.S.A. INC., a foreign corporation,

Defendant.

CASE NO. CV-13-5021-EFS

ORDER DENYING DEFENDANT'S MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT

While inspecting his employer's paint products at the Richland Home Depot, Plaintiff Michael Newell injured his shoulder when a bucket of paint fell on him. Defendant Home Depot asks the Court to enter summary judgment in its favor on the Newells' premises-liability negligence lawsuit. ECF No. 21. The Newells oppose the motion. After reviewing the record and relevant legal authority, the Court is fully informed and denies Home Depot's summary-judgment motion.

1 A. Factual Statement¹

2 Mr. Newell worked as a paint vendor for a company that sold 3 products at the Home Depot in Richland, amongst other stores. As a 4 paint vendor, Mr. Newell ensured that his employer's products were 5 appropriately displayed at the Home Depot by pulling paint containers 6 to the front of the paint bays, facing the paint containers to the 7 aisle, and checking prices. To accomplish these tasks, Mr. Newell 8 crawled into paint bays on a daily basis.

9 Mr. Newell did not restock the paint product; rather Home Depot 10 employees restocked products on the shelves almost daily. Mr. Newell 11 also did not have a supervisor at the Home Depot and rarely called 12 upon Home Depot employees for assistance. Yet, Mr. Newell did speak 13 with the store manager, Sal, nearly every time he went to the store.

14 If paint² spilled, it was the responsibility of the Home Depot 15 paint department associates to clean the paint bays. And the Home

18 ¹ The parties submitted a Joint Statement of Uncontroverted Facts. ECF No.
19 34. The Court treats these facts as established consistent with Federal 20 Rule of Civil Procedure 56(d), and sets these forth in this Factual 21 Statement without citation to the record. Any disputed facts or 22 quotations are supported by a citation to the record. When considering 23 this motion and creating this factual section, the Court 1) believed the 24 undisputed facts and the non-moving party's evidence, 2) drew all 25 justifiable inferences therefrom in the non-moving party's favor, 3) did 26 not weigh the evidence or assess credibility, and 4) did not accept assertions made by the non-moving party that were flatly contradicted by the record. See Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 255 (1986); Scott v. Harris, 550 U.S. 372, 380 (2007).

1 Depot had a spill procedure for handling hazardous materials like 2 paint. Other store policies and procedures required daily inspections 3 of the store departments before each department opened.

4 On February 1, 2014, Mr. Newell arrived at the Home Depot and 5 began his usual task of organizing his employer's products in the 6 paint department. Mr. Newell climbed into a paint bay and moved paint 7 buckets so that the labels faced forward. He observed paint buckets 8 near the back of the bay with the labels facing the other direction.
9 Crouched near the back of the paint bay amongst five-gallon buckets, 10 he grabbed the edge of a lid to a five-gallon bucket so that he could 11 turn the bucket to see the label. Newell Dep., ECF No. 22, Ex. 2 at 12 42. Unbeknownst to Mr. Newell, there was dried paint underneath the 13 five-gallon bucket which caused it to be stuck to the cement floor.
14 Id. When Mr. Newell grabbed the side of the bucket's lid, the bucket 15 broke loose from the dried paint; the force of the bucket coming loose 16 from the dried paint, caused the five-gallon bucket on top of that 17 loosened bucket to fall down on Mr. Newell's shoulder, injuring him.
18 Id. at 42-43. In pain and now laying in a fetal position on the 19 cement floor, Mr. Newell called for Home Depot employee Whitney Hanson 20 to assist him. Id. at 43. In a few minutes, Ms. Hanson came to his 21 assistance and moved buckets out of the way so that Mr. Newell could 22 crawl out of the bay. Id. at 43.

24
25 ² The Court uses the generic term "paint" to refer to both paint and stain 26 products.

1 Ms. Hanson observed that there was dried paint under the entire 2 diameter of the five-gallon bucket that Mr. Newell had attempted to 3 move: there was no paint elsewhere on the ground. It did not look 4 like anyone had tried to previously clean the paint on the concrete 5 floor under the bucket. Ms. Hanson then tried to scrape the dried 6 paint.

7 Dried spills are not something the Home Depot paint department 8 normally has to address. However, Mr. Newell testified at his 9 deposition that he has seen, and was aware, that before February 1, 10 2010, there was dried paint "all over the place in the paint bay."
11 Yet, he had never encountered a bucket of product stuck to the floor 12 as a result of dried paint. ECF No. 22, Ex. 2 at 32:9-11.

13 After the incident, Mr. Newell spoke to Sal, the store manager, 14 about the incident and his injury, however, Mr. Newell got the 15 impression that Sal was busy and not interested in hearing about what 16 happened. ECF No. 34, Ex. 2 at 48:24-25; 49:1-6; 62:7-10.

17 A. Standard

18 Summary judgment is appropriate if the record establishes "no 19 genuine dispute as to any material fact and the movant is entitled to 20 judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(a). The party 21 opposing summary judgment must point to specific facts establishing a 22 genuine dispute of material fact for trial. Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 23 477 U.S. 317, 324 (1986); Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio 24 Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 586-87 (1986). If the non-moving party fails to 25 make such a showing for any of the elements essential to its case for 26

1 which it bears the burden of proof, the trial court should grant the 2 summary-judgment motion. Celotex Corp., 477 U.S. at 322.

3 B. Analysis

4 To prevail on the common-law, premises-liability negligence
5 action, the Newells must establish that Home Depot owed a duty to Mr.
6 Newell, Home Depot breached that duty, and Mr. Newell suffered 7 injuries which were proximately caused by the breach of the duty. See 8 Hertog, ex rel. S.A.H. v. City of Seattle, 138 Wn.2d 265, 275 (1999).
9 Under the common law, the duty owed by a landowner to an entrant 10 depends on whether the entrant was a trespasser, licensee, or invitee.
11 Afoa v. Port of Seattle, 176 Wn.2d 460, 467 (2013). The parties agree 12 that, as an employee of a business selling product at Home Depot, Mr.
13 Newell was an invitee to Home Depot's premises. The issue before the 14 Court now at summary judgment is what duty, if any, Home Depot owed to 15 Mr. Newell as an invitee under these business circumstances, and 16 whether there is a genuine dispute of material fact as to whether that 17 duty was breached by Home Depot. The initial determination of what 18 duty Home Depot owed to Mr. Newell as an invitee is a question of law; 19 while, the question of whether that duty was breached is a factual 20 question, typically resolved by the finder of fact. See Hutchins v.
21 1001 Fourth Ave. Assocs., 116 Wn.2d 217, 220 (1991).

22 Home Depot first argues that it does not owe Mr. Newell any 23 invitee duties because Mr. Newell was injured on the Home Depot 24 premises in his capacity as an employee for a company selling its 25 products at Home Depot, relying on the liability-insulation rule 26 applied in Kessler v. Swedish Hospital Medical Center, 58 Wn. App. 674

(1990), and Tauscher v. Puget Sound Power and Light Co., 96 Wn.2d 274 (1981). The Court finds the liability insulation applied in those cases inapplicable here. In both Kessler and Tauscher the plaintiff was injured while performing work that was inherently dangerous: cleaning the exterior windows on the ninth story of a building (Kessler) and climbing a telephone pole to connect wires near high voltage lines (Tauscher). Under these inherently dangerous work settings, the courts ruled that a business landowner is not liable to the employee of an independent contractor for his injuries resulting from the dangerous work on the land. Kessler, 58 Wn. App. at 678-79. This liability insulation for the business landowner is consistent with the rule that the business landowner is also not liable for its own employee's personal injuries during employment as such injuries are covered under workers' compensation laws. Id. Because Mr. Newell's work of checking on the condition of his employer's stock at the Richland Home Depot was not inherently dangerous work, Home Depot is not insulated from liability to Mr. Newell under the Kessler and Tauscher line of inherently-dangerous-work cases. Rather, under the circumstances, Home Depot owed Mr. Newell the typical duty owed to invitees: the "duty to avoid endangering him by [Home Depot's] own negligence." Lamborn v. Phillips Pac. Chem. Co., 89 Wn.2d 701, 707-08 (1978).

Finding that Home Depot is not insulated from potential liability for Mr. Newell's injuries that he suffered when he was an invitee at the Richland Home Depot, the Court proceeds to analyze whether summary judgment in Home Depot's favor is appropriate on this

1 premises-liability negligence claim. Washington courts turn to the 2 Restatement (Second) of Torts §§ 343 and 343A to set the duty owed by 3 a possessor of land to an invitee.³ Kamla v. Space Needle Corp., 147
4 Wn.2d 114, 125 (2002). Section 343 states:

5 [a] possessor of land is subject to liability for physical 6 harm caused to his invitees by a condition on the land if, but only if, [the possessor]

7 (a) knows or by the exercise of reasonable care would discover the condition, and should realize that 8 it involves an unreasonable risk of harm to such invitees, and

9 (b) should expect that they will not discover or realize the danger, or will fail to protect themselves against it, and 10 (c) fails to exercise reasonable care to protect them against the danger.

11 Restatement (2d) Torts § 343. Section 343A continues: "A possessor 12 of land is not liable to his invitees for physical harm caused to them 13 by any activity or condition on the land whose danger is known or 14 obvious to them, unless the possessor should anticipate the harm 15 despite such knowledge or obviousness." Id. § 343A(1).

16 Accordingly, the Court first focuses on whether there was a 17 condition on the premises that involved an unreasonable risk of harm 18 to the invitee. Home Depot argues that dried paint does not pose an 19 unreasonable risk of harm, highlighting that Mr. Newell testified at 20 his deposition that dried paint is not dangerous.
21

23 ³ The Court applies Washington substantive law because this lawsuit is 24 based on diversity jurisdiction and the incident at issue occurred in 25 Washington. See Summers v. Interstate Tractor & Equip. Co., 466 F.2d 42, 26 47 (9th Cir. 1972).

1 At Mr. Newell's deposition he answered the following questions
2 regarding dried paint:

3 Q. So if you had occasion to see dried paint in the bay, what would you do?

4 A. Report it to the store.

Q. Why?

5 A. Because it's their responsibility to clean it up.

Q. Is that a danger to have dried paint there?

6 A. Maybe. I don't know. I can't think of how dangerous it would be, but yeah. Yeah.

7 Q. Or is it just an aesthetic concern?

A. It's more - yes, I would agree with that.

8 ECF No. 22, 33:23-25 - 34:1-7. Home Depot submits that Mr. Newell's 9 deposition answers, and the fact that he did not disclose the dried 10 paint promptly to a Home Depot manager, support a finding as a matter 11 of law that dried paint does not present an unreasonable risk of harm 12 to an invitee. The Court does not so find. This line of questioning 13 did not require Mr. Newell to opine regarding the specific risk at 14 issue here: whether paint that is permitted to dry under buckets of 15 paint at the Home Depot presents an unreasonable risk of harm to an 16 invitee. As to this issue, the Court finds a genuine dispute of 17 material fact: a reasonable juror could determine that dried paint 18 presents an unreasonable risk of harm (a danger) when it is permitted 19 to dry and affixes a paint container to another object, such as the 20 floor. In analyzing this issue, the jury can consider the totality of 21 the circumstances including Mr. Newell's relaying of the condition and 22 injury to Ms. Hanson and Sal.

23 The jury should also consider whether Home Depot would have 24 discovered the danger if it exercised reasonable care, whether Home 25 Depot should expect that an invitee will not discover or realize the 26

1 danger or fail to protect themselves against it, and whether Home 2 Depot exercised reasonable care to protect invitees against the 3 danger. See Iwai v. State, 129 Wn.2d 84, 93-94 (1996) (setting forth 4 elements for a premises-liability negligence action brought by an 5 invitee). These are questions of fact for which there is insufficient 6 evidence for the Court to make a finding as a matter of law in Home
7 Depot's favor.⁴ See Ciminski v. Finn Corp., 13 Wn. App. 815, 818-19 8 (1975) (recognizing that a property owner must exercise reasonable 9 care in protecting invitees from injury and that "[w]hat is reasonable 10 depends upon the nature and the circumstances surrounding the business 11 conducted").

12 Relying on Ciminski, the Newells suggest they need not prove the 13 "notice" element, i.e., that Home Depot would have discovered the 14 condition if it exercised reasonable care, because the "self-service 15 operation" exception applies given that Home Depot's paint department 16 is a self-service paint center. Cf. Ingersoll v. DeBartolo, 123 Wn.2d 17 649, 562 (1994) (recognizing that notice of the unsafe condition by 18

19 ⁴ Home Depot asks the Court not to consider the expert report 20 prepared by Joellen Gill, the Newells' expert witness, ECF No. 24, Ex.
21 3. Because an expert witness may express an opinion based on hearsay, 22 so long as it is the type of information that an expert in the 23 particular field would reasonably rely on, the Court has considered 24 Ms. Gill's expert report and her opinions contained therein. Fed. R.
25 Evid. 703.
26

1 the possessor is typically a required element for the invitee to 2 prove). In Ciminski, the Washington Court of Appeals ruled the 3 injured plaintiff need not prove that the self-service restaurant knew 4 the food item that the plaintiff slipped on was dropped on the floor 5 because the owner of a self-service operation has actual notice that 6 customers may drop food at any time: thereby, creating a "self-service 7 exception" to the notice element. The Washington court's rationale 8 for the self-service exception to the notice element was that a self-9 service operation accepts the risk that food items can be dangerously 10 located on the floor by customers and therefore the self-service 11 operation effectively has constructive notice of the dangerous 12 condition presented by food items on the floor. Id. at 819. In 13 pertinent part, the Washington Court of Appeals stated, "[W]hen 14 plaintiff has shown that the circumstances were such as to create the 15 reasonable probability that the dangerous condition would occur, he 16 need not also prove actual or constructive notice of the specific 17 condition." Id. at 822 (quoting Bozza v. Vonado, Inc., 42 N.J. 355, 18 360 (1964)).

19 Under the circumstances of this case, the Court declines to 20 apply the self-service exception to the notice requirement. Home 21 Depot's self-service operation entails customers removing paint 22 product near the aisle or the front of the bay. Neither party 23 presented evidence that it is typical for a Home Depot customer to 24 climb into a bay, bypassing the product closer to the aisle to remove 25 the same product near the back of the bay. Accordingly, under the 26 facts before the Court, it would not be typical for a Home Depot

1 customer to climb into the bay, bypass the product, and attempt to 2 move a bucket of that same product that was stacked below another 3 product. For these reasons, the Court declines to remove the notice
4 requirement. See Pimental v. Roundup Co., 100 Wn.2d 39, 50 (1983) 5 ("[T]he requirement of showing notice will be eliminated only if the 6 particular self-service operation of the defendant is shown to be such 7 that the existence of unsafe conditions is reasonably foreseeable.").
8 The Newells must prove the notice element, i.e., that Home Depot would 9 have discovered the claimed dangerous condition if it exercised 10 reasonable care.

11 Yet, the Court finds as a matter of law that dried paint hidden 12 under a paint container is not an open and obvious danger for a Home 13 Depot invitee, including Mr. Newell, who was familiar with paint 14 products and the Richland Home Depot's storage and care for paint 15 products. Dried paint under a paint container is not similar to a 16 seven-foot-tall store sign, Suriano v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 117 Wn.
17 App. 819, 829 (2003), or an open elevator shaft, Kamla, 147 Wn.2d at 18 126. As the condition presented by the dried paint under the paint 19 container was not open and obvious, the standard set forth in 20 Restatement § 343(A)(1) does not apply to assessing Home Depot's 21 liability; rather, the jury's analysis will be guided by the elements
22 set forth in Restatement § 343.⁵

23
24 ⁵ In light of the language in Suriano v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 117 Wn. App.
25 819, 831 (2003), that "it is ordinarily the better practice to give both 26 Section 343 and Section 343A(1) instructions," the Court allows the
